Prince Asiedu is currently a Masters programme student at the University of Passau. He will talk about his educational journey from rural Ghana to Germany. Join us for an interesting evening!

The project “Global Classrooms: educational journeys - share your story” is aimed at all teacher education students and all others, who would like to learn about global educational systems from a personal perspective and at the same time practise their English language skills.

Passau University students, who completed their school education abroad, tell us about their “educational journeys” which brought them to Passau. They share recent first-hand knowledge about the country they grew up in, the school system they experienced, as well as personal stories and perspectives.

The peer-to-peer format is delivered in country specific presentations and Q&A sessions.

Professionalization of Teacher Education in Ghana: Beyond Content, Context and Theory

- Gastvortrag von Prof. Dr. Dandy George Dampson (University of Winneba/ Ghana)
in englischer Sprache

Teacher education and schooling in Ghana started when western education was introduced in the form of 'Castle schools' by the Portuguese, the first Europeans to visit Ghana in 1471. At the initial stages of educational development, teaching in the schools in Ghana, as in other parts of West Africa, was modelled on the well-known monitorial systems of Joseph Lancaster and Andrew Bell (Hilliard 1957) which were popular in Britain and Canada at the beginning of the 19th century. In this system, the scarcity of trained teachers was somewhat short-circuited. Since then, teacher education and schooling in Ghana has gone through various reforms which mostly aimed to restructure the education system inherited from the British. This presentation contributes to the ongoing dialogue, implementation and understanding of the evolution of teacher education in Ghana and the impact of educational reforms on curricula, teaching and training which is geared towards teacher professionalization in Ghana. Participants will be exposed to some of the tenets of teacher professionalization such as the National Teacher Standards, Support Teaching in Schools, Teacher Licensure, Teaching Standards and Teacher Specialization.
